Dedication

We, the Class of June, 1927,
Offer "Pieces of Eight" as a token of our Sincere Appreciation of the Efforts of our Friend and Advisor.

MR. HARRY A. HARRISON

Dear Seniors:

YOU graduate at an auspicious time in June. The Board of Education and the Board of Superintendents in their wisdom regard three years as a proper probationary period. By the expiration of that period, which Thomas Jefferson High School is just completing, they feel that a school and all those in it have given every indication of whither they are headed. Now that you are leaving Thomas Jefferson, I am curious to know what it stands for in your minds and hearts. Is there a Jefferson standard? Have we made it sufficiently clear that we aim at a high standard of scholarship and personality? Is the school doing enough to develop the highly talented students among us or are they lost sight of because of the stress we place on service and athletics? Are we in other words, a well-rounded school?

As I walk about the building and meet our students here and there, I get a clear understanding of the complex diversity of the types enrolled under the "Orange and Blue." To turn our boys and girls into men and women prepared to meet life squarely, ready to do their share for humanity as well as for themselves has been our goal. Are we reaching it? That is for you to say.

I should like to hear from some of you in reply to these questions later on when you see the school in perspective of distance. I started out with a great deal of faith in young people and I have not lost it. I hope I shall never lose it. May the next ten years, during which you will try to establish yourselves firmly in your life work, be happy ones for you.

Your Principal and Friend,

Elsie Lieberman

President's Message

Dear Fellow Graduates.

We have reached the parting of the ways. As we leave the comparative security of our dear Alma Mater for the world of many possibilities and great responsibilities, let us strive to attain the splendid ideals set for us by the faithful guides who have influenced us such a great deal.

To these guides, our parents and teachers, we owe our most sincere gratitude. In later years we shall love and cherish the memory of their helping hands and their unfailing devotion to our success.

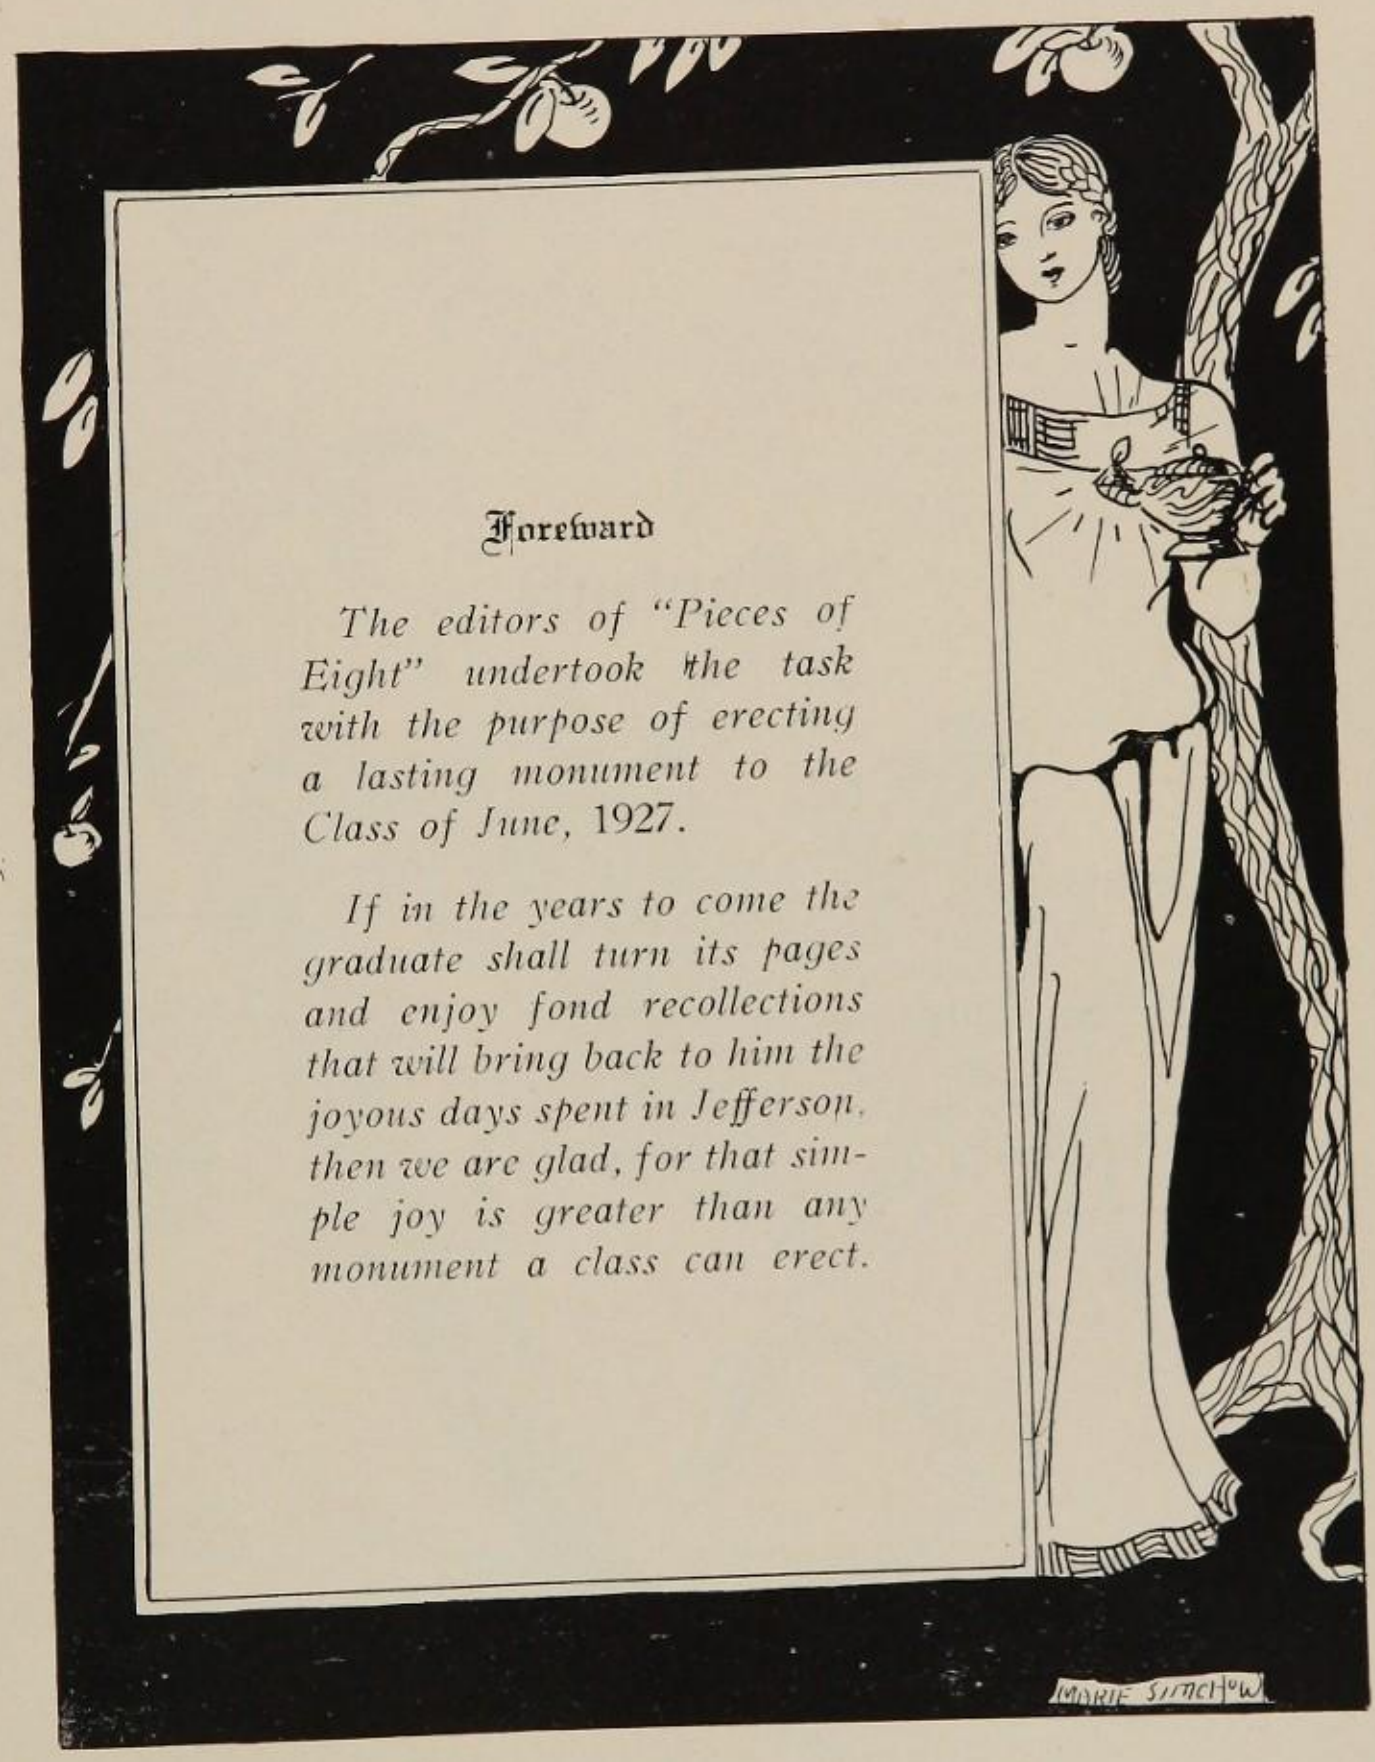
From here many diverging paths lead toward the horizon where brightly shines the goal of our ambitions. We must not forget that wherever there is light there is some shadow. Therefore, let us raise high the gleaming torch of our ideals to chase the shadows from our path. With earnestness, perseverance and cheerfulness, success will be our retribution. Dear friends, remember: "Every arrow feels the pull of the earth. To hit the mark, aim high!"

With best wishes, I am

Fraternally yours,

Joseph Gaumer

Senior Class President.



Foreward

The editors of "Pieces of Eight" undertook the task with the purpose of erecting a lasting monument to the Class of June, 1927.

If in the years to come the graduate shall turn its pages and enjoy fond recollections that will bring back to him the joyous days spent in Jefferson, then we are glad, for that simple joy is greater than any monument a class can erect.

Sonnet of Farewell

Now once again we wade ashore
And leave behind a second stream
Of years that linger like a dream,
Another wreath in Triumph's door
Another laurel sought and won
That leaves us with a toll to pay
Of childhood years now lured away
To swell the fame of Jefferson.
Undaunted by the water's roar
With step unwavering we go
To overpower the undertow
And plunge into the stream once more;
Leaving our names like the foam of the sea
To surge and then fade into memory.

—Claire I. Shapiro.

LEAPING eagerly, fading reluctantly, their blazing effulgence never dimmed the flames strained upward, painting their pictures on the black canvas of night. The flickering shadows danced grotesquely within the radiant circle of light. No other blaze challenged the darkness save for the answering gleam in the eyes of the man who lay there—the man who dreamed. The reflection glowed as intensely as the flamboyant flames, then slowly vanished.

He had built that fire; had kindled its first spark; had fanned that spark into these flaming tongues of heat and light; had dreamed of the time when its flames would break the walls of night and make way for dawn's invasion.

The flames leapt in his eyes as before, and, as before, vanished. Beautiful? Yes, his fire was beautiful, but he was not content, not content to have found the light for himself. He longed to build one that would enlighten his world with its radiant brilliance—one that all could see, could understand, and enjoy.

With a sigh he sadly lifted his head, stared off into the darkness and wished, fervently prayed, that he be given the power to dispel it, and that the dreamer who had become a thinker might become a doer. And as he started, he became aware of a change. The night had grown fainter, but still fought valiantly lest the world slip from its grasp. His gaze turned upward, upward 'till caught by the glow of a lone, shining star, the star whose rays diffused this darkness. How bright its lustre, how far-reaching its glow, how staunch was its brilliant light! Suddenly a sparkling twinkle mirrored itself in his eyes. The dreamer's soul and body merged into the one thought as his heart beat but the one refrain—he wanted to have it—he must have it—he would have it.

The flames burned high, but now in the heart of the man who strove to ascend the insurmountable. Slowly, painfully he mounted higher and higher. And as he advanced the night retreated. Once he fell, the fire—crushed. Again the blackness rushed upon him; engulfed him as before. But the white, piercing rays of the star towards which his eyes were ever turned rent the darkness to strengthen the faltering determination. With new-born courage he faced his task. Now he stumbled, again the impediment was vaulted, but always he climbed higher—nearer to his goal. Many times he had sought a new path, weary with one splendid effort he bounded to the mountain top. As the cry of exultation rose to the heavens he saw that his star was the light—a beacon-light of ideals—atop a mansion from whose windows streamed the beams of knowledge dispelling the mists of ignorance. A song in his heart and on his lips the vow to keep and increase the lustre of the star he had won, he passed beneath the portals.

Amid popular acclamation Dr. Lieberman was officially installed as principal of the Thomas Jefferson High School on October 6, 1924. As a result he was confronted with a stupdendous task, the organization of the school. With the aid of his capable assistants it was practically completed within two months— a feat to be proud of. Dr. Lieberman, however, was not satisfied. He and the faculty began to build plans for Thomas Jefferson's future in the fields of scholarship, athletics, and art.

The school was launched in a manner that promised much. A constitution that has insured many privileges for Jeffersonians was soon adopted; the colors that were to wave victoriously times innumerable were chosen—the orange and the blue; a school paper that drew attention and praise for its first edition was issued during the first month of the school's existence; clubs and teams which have been of great aid to the school were organized. They saved and raised money for it and gained fame and honor in its name. The debating teams by winning from such schools as Manual, New Utrecht, and Bushwick have won the championship trophy. The Math and Chess teams have added to Jefferson's list of championships. In athletics too Jefferson stands in the front ranks since she holds the soccer championship, is Brooklyn's best in basketball, and is known because of her swimming, track, and rifle teams, which are coming into their own. With more experience Jefferson may well expect to leap to the front. It has already done so in scholarship for it is one of the three best high schools and bids fair to be the first. The arts also have been conquered as the musical organizations have won high honors while the drawing team has retained the city trophy three successive times. Medals of various characters have been awarded to Jeffersonians, so that it is manifest that the expectations of the administrators are being fulfilled.

Despite the growth of Jefferson's enrollment from 4,000 to 7,000, thereby claiming the title of "the biggest high school in the world," the liberties of the students have been increased. With the advent of self-government in the assemblies and the installation of different institutions the Jefferson students enjoy more privileges than any others.

The Senior Class now leaves behind it a memento whose work will continue after they have left. Till now, the school has afforded many opportunities for the appreciation of sports and studies, but little in the actual viewing of beauty. It is the hope of the Seniors that as the years go by, the ivy will grow, even as their love for their Alma Mater and remedy this one defect, leaving Thomas Jefferson an ideal high school.

* * * * *

Many have come forth from the mansion and gone into the darkness—there to begin their own fires. Others are preparing themselves for this same task, but he who first entered remains within, guarding the star which glows brighter and brighter——

SENIOR TEACHERS

"WHAT OF IT?"

WITH Ring Lardner's kind permission, I should like to address to you, in his searching manner, a question which serves as the title of his recent book, "WHAT OF IT?"

You are graduating this month —WHAT OF IT? If to you this receiving of a diploma from high school means the end of all serious study—if it gives you the impression that you are now a full-fledged adult, that you need no further education and that you are perfectly qualified, just as you are, to "carry on" for the rest of your life—then your teachers have the right to ask you, in disappointment and in scorn, "You're graduating? WHAT OF IT?"

If marching in the procession on graduation night and receiving the congratulations and applause of your relatives and friends are the all-in-all for which you have waited and worked these many years—then your parents, who have so hopefully and so longingly looked forward to this glorious hour, have the right, disillusioned and broken-hearted, to ask, "You're graduating? WHAT OF IT?"

But—if being called a graduate is a challenge to you to begin a second and better period in your life, wherein you intend to try to secure for yourself all the worthwhile knowledge that is obtainable—if it acts as a summons to you, so to mold your character that you will be a credit to your loved ones, as well as a source of pride and help to the community in which you dwell—then the question which heads this message is superfluous, and we who have tried to instill in you a love for your fellowman and a zeal to serve your country, will feel that our efforts have not been in vain.

The three years which you spent in these halls, have, I hope, enabled you to make lasting friendships, and to realize that just as "man does not live by bread alone," so no person may feel self-sufficient and desirous of going his own way, unresponsive to the needs and the problems of other mortals.

These are interesting, yet critical times, especially for those who, like you, are commencing such a wonderful journey through life. Perhaps the splendid advice uttered by the prophet Micah, some twenty-five hundred years ago: "To do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God," will help you go through that journey, happily and usefully.

May you go on "from strength to strength," ever eager to justify the high hopes and the lofty aspirations which your parents and your friends here in Thomas Jefferson dream for you!

Senior Grade Adviser.

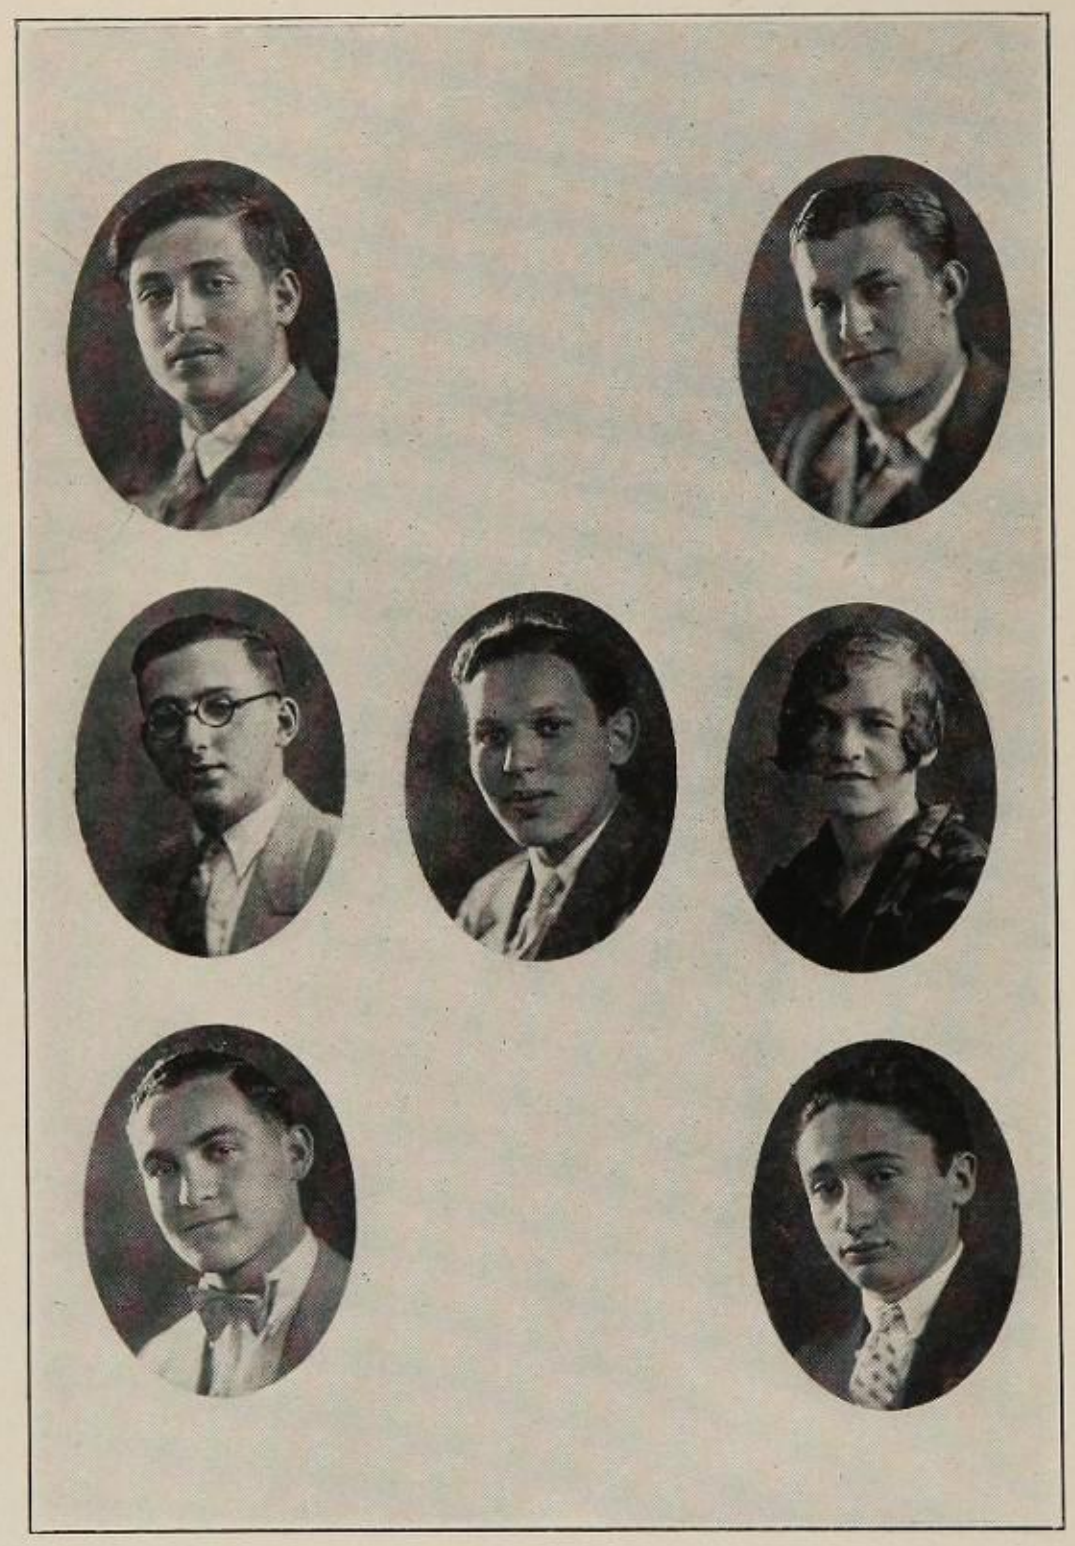
CLUBS



THE GENERAL ORGANIZATION is the supreme governing body of the school. Everything connected with student activities must be passed upon by this body and becomes a law with the consent of the Principal. Every cent spent by the school independent of the Board of Education is supervised by the Student Budget Committee, composed of the president, vice-president and secretary. A club, before it can be established, must have its constitution ratified by the G. O. A council can exist only by the consent of the G. O.

The president of the G. O., Jack Zack, was elected on the basis of scholarship, character and service. A man with a magnetic personality, an inspiring leader, a fine speaker, and a good scholar. The vice-president, William "Algernon" Proopis," was elected on the basis of his literary and executive abilities. Proopis' press-agent, Abe Allen, made a good job of it with the result that Proopis was elected the most conceited boy in the Senior Class and also the best boy writer. No wonder —he's editor of the Jeffersonian and of Pieces of Eight.

Hilda Goldfeder, all-around girl of the Senior Class, was elected for her versatility. Freedgood, the eighth-term G. O. Representative, Sindel, another G. O. Representative, and Joe Zausner fill out the Seniors on the G. O.

The outstanding accomplishment was the putting over of the ivy project, the raising of funds to defray the expenses of planting ivy around the walls of the school.

THE SENIOR COUNCIL

THE SENIOR COUNCIL is the representative body of the Senior Class and is responsible for everything accomplished by it. This term's president, Joseph Zausner, has worked like a beaver to make his administration a success. To all appearances his efforts are not fruitless.

Hy Goldberg, the vice-president, has been more or less of a sinecure. Dorothy Nisenson, has proven herself a very efficient secretary. The trust that the senior class has in Leon Greene is manifest in his being elected treasurer, and a wonderful treasurer he has been.

From the Council was recruited the different chairmen of the various committees to carry out the functions of the Senior Class. The Waldorf-Astoria was procured for the Senior Prom held there on June 23. The Academy of Music was the place selected for Commencement exercises. Class Night, under the supervision of Miss Charlotte Schwenker, proved to be an undisputed success. Orders from Mr. Harrison, the grade adviser, were transmitted thru the members of the Council.

Dramatic Society

JOHN BARRYMORE, Jane Cowl, Ethel Barrymore, Edwin Booth! Such names as these are conjured by the antics of our Dramatic Society under the leadership of Mr. Lieberman, head of the Elocution Department.

Mrs. Aylesworth has had charge of the society until this term, when it was entirely reorganized by Mr. Lieberman.

The Dramatic Society was launched with the establishment of the school, and has had a very sucecssful career.

Its first large production was "The Pot Boilers," given at the Premier Theatre. Next came "Clarence," sponsored by Miss Fitzgerald. "A night at an Inn," by Lord Dunsany, is a play given by the society that will not soon be forgotten.

On Saturday, June 4, the Dramatic Society, under the supervision of Mr. Lieberman, produced a "Midsummer Night's Dream" by William Shakespeare. The scenery, the costumes and the actors were little short of professional.

The society has always been a capable functioning body. This term's production went a long way in furthering the important ivy project.

The Liberty Bell

THE Liberty Bell was the first publication of T. J. H. S. It was founded when high school opened.

Mr. Tarr was the first faculty adviser of the Liberty Bell, organizing the staff and placing Oscar Neidich at the helm. Oscar was succeded by Willie Kaye; then followed Sadie Brier, Sidney Pomerantz and finally Bernard Felsenstien the present editor-in-chief.

It has had a very successful career, due to the earnest cooperation of the student body in supporting the paper.

Miss Cooper was Mr. Tarr's successor as faculty advisor of the Liberty Bell. Her untiring efforts did much to elevate the standard of the publication. The present faculty advisors are Mr. Henry Goodman and Mr. Edward Cohen, both well able to head the Liberty Bell.

Kremenko from the beginning has edited all sports and especially his weekly komment kolumn which ranks as high as any other sport kolumn konducted in any High School paper.

Abe Allen is considered one of the finest schoolboy humorists. Ike Babitzky is the managing editor of the paper who believes in trying humor when work won't accomplish what it wanted.

The Jeffersonian

THE JEFFERSONIAN, the quarterly of Thomas Jefferson High School, had its inception November, 1925. It was a publication for which the student body was kept waiting for one whole year. Under the advisorship of Mr. Felix Sper, the magazine had as its purpose the fostering of the Seven Arts.. Apparently the Seven Arts were not enough for the insatiable appetites of the students. In order to appease them, the Jeffersonian added a special sports kolumn, edited by Kremenko, and a humor section edited by Abe Allen, the man who put an "A" into the name of William Proopis.

The Jeffersonian from its inception received great praise from professional critics and writers. It is felt that the Jeffersonian ranks with the best literary periodicals of high school rank.

When Mr. Sper departed for an extended tour through Europe, Miss Henrietta Cooper took charge of that publication. She in turn was succeeded by Mr. Goodman. The "father" of the Jeffersonian, Bill Proopis, was the editor from the beginning until now, graduation ending his editorship.

Claire Shapiro has been an associate editor of the Jeffersonian for several terms during which she has taken care of and written poetry which has been highly praised from every quarter.

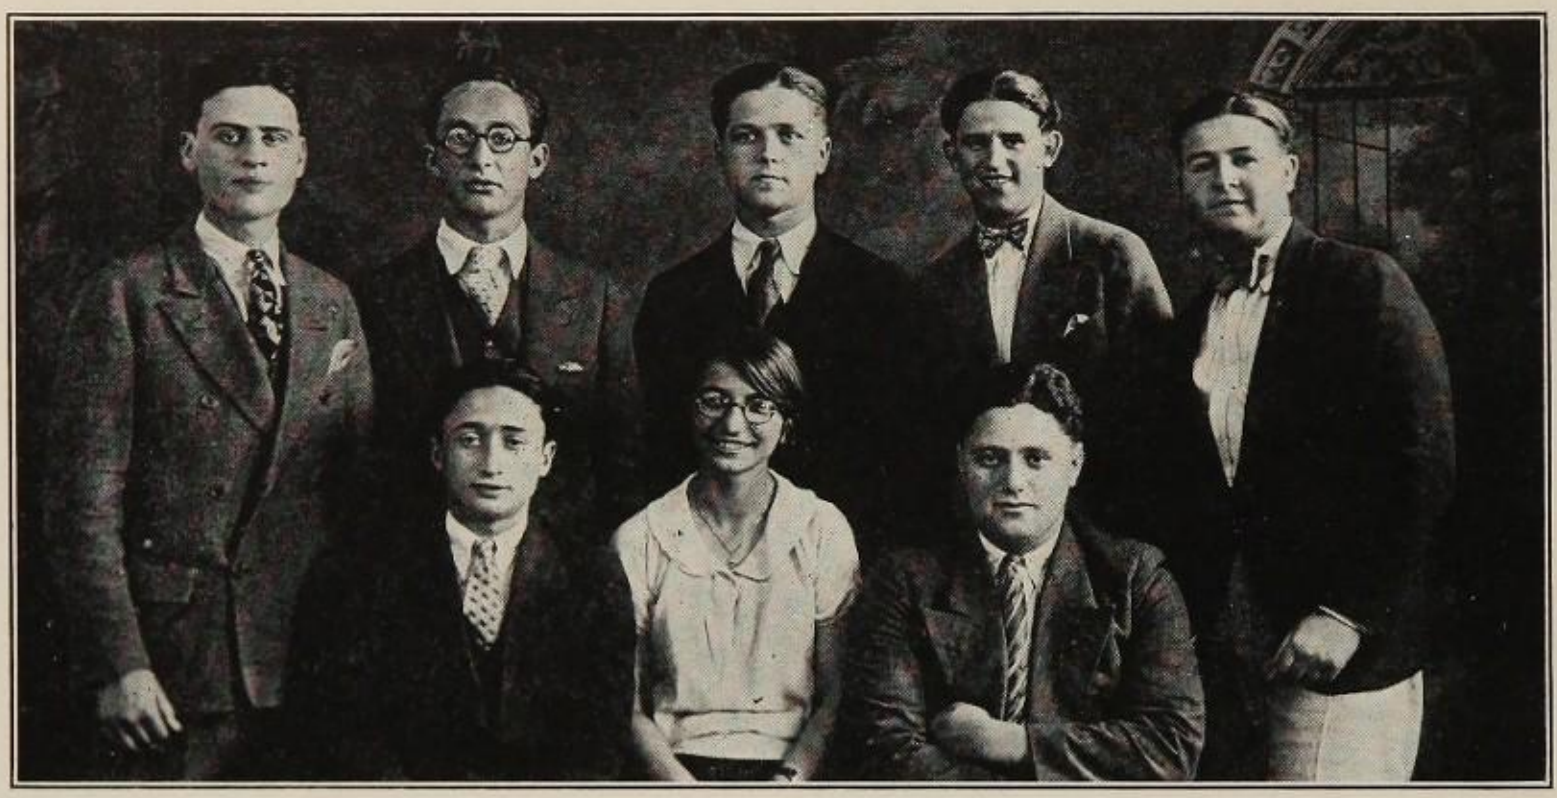
Max Schwartz, the art editor, is considered a fine artist of professional calibre, as is Abe Allen, the humor section's creator.

Arista

An honor society upholding the ideals of character, scholarship and service is the Arista, under the supervision of Miss Bertha Cohen, chairman of the Arista senate. Ever since it was organized, this society has been the aim of every student in the school, because it stands for the very best.

At the end of each term, lists of pupils receiving an average for one year of 80 or over, are prepared. These are sent for comment and ratification to the subject teachers of the students. An investigation committee of Arista members is elected to determine if these pupils are of Arista caliber. After a process of elimination a final list is prepared which is submitted for ratification to the entire Arista society.

The girl leader of the Arista is Judith Meyers, known through the school for her invaluable service. The boy-leader and chairman of the society is Joseph Zausner, at present the senior class president. That the Arista also strives for social perfection is indicated by the Arista receptions and the outings held every semester. As we go to press the outing held June 9, at Oyster Bay has proven an unrivalled undisputed success. May it uphold its ideals in the future as it has thus far in the past.



The Student Patrol

Wanted: Someone to run errands, act as guards, keep order, keep clean, set a good example to student body, work at all hours, be courteous, sacrifice time and energy. Pay—insults by many; a grudging appreciation by a few.

———————

HOW many of us would apply for such a position advertised in our daily newspapers? Not many, most assuredly. Yet upon due thought, one discovers that the Student Patrol does just these tasks and well!

In some cities of 7,500 inhabitants the police force has a great many officers, but very few privates in its police corps.

The now defunct S. L. had that trouble —too many officers and therefore, too little service. There were many conflicting authorities. Now authority is centralized in the different managers directly appointed by the G. O.

Barnett Blander, the S. P. president, together with Mr. Streicher and Mr. Brown must be given the major share of credit in the reorganization and present functioning ability of the S. P.

"Pieces of Eight"

WITH ideals soaring high into the heavens, the Seniors of June, 1927, set about to plan a senior class book that would surpass entirely that issued by the last graduating class. "Pieces of Eight" is the first attempt Jefferson has made at a pretentious senior class chronicle. No money, time or effort was spared in making the book what we earnestly hope is a success.

Some difficulty was encountered in the fact that the editors of the book were prominently featured in Senior Class Night. This delayed work on the publication to a degree which necessitated a considerable amount of hustling to make up for lost time.

The advisors Miss Aylward, Miss Hamilton, Mr. Sakol and Mr. Dodson, gave unstintingly of their time and efforts in order to help turn out a book worthy of the quality and quantity of the June, 1927 class.

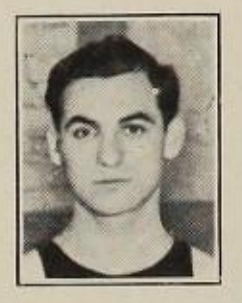
The editors-in-Chief are William A. Proopis and Claire Shapiro who have done the greater part of the writing and editing of the "Pieces of Eight."

Abe Allen and Ike Babitsky have taken care of the knocks, humor, novelties and pictures.

Bernard Felsenstien; Pat Thompson, Sylvia Siegal, Sophie Smith, Sarah Cooper, Charles Solinsky, Sid Schwartz and Henry Kirsch were the members of the board of editors.

We all sincerely hope you will enjoy this book in reading as much as we have enjoyed ourselves editing it.

Frolicking Days of Yore



OUR predecessor in this gentle task of prescribing farewell athletic addresses, one Phil Marenberg by name, gave his story the title of "The Swan Song of the Athletes," and Mr. Marenberg wasn't very far off his point at that. After all, it is their swan song as far as high school competition is concerned, for once Dr. Lieberman rushes forward to gladly tuck a sheepskin under their arms they can no longer enjoy the term of "high-school boy."

But we would rather have it "The Frollicking Days of Yore," for frollicking days they surely were. What with victories coming in here, there, and everywhere that Jefferson was concerned, a mirthful time was had by all concerned. It is very fine and shows well-breeding, besides being sportsmanlike, to applaud your team in defeat; but there's nothing to tickle the heart-strings like a good old-fashioned victory, whether in ping-pong or football. And we had plenty of triumphs to laugh ourselves sick. Hence, the frolicking days of yore.

But that's stepping away from the main topic. In the graduating class of June, 1927, of which we are all members, we find some thirty-odd participants of various Orange and Blue aggregations. But what those thirty-odd athletes did to build up Jefferson tradition we can readily say that one hundred and twenty-eight won't do in the next ten years. That's quite a wide statement, but in our humble opinion, we do not rate this any exaggeration at all. With absolute proof, we can show that the majority of members of each championship team belong to our graduating class. Not that we care to boast, but why not give credit where credit is due?

That's that, and now we come to the ranks of the individual athletes, whom we shall mention in order of importance. Without doubt, first and foremost comes the great Max Posnack, probably the greatest all-around athlete to grace the Brooklyn scholastic field in the 1920's.

Who can forget little Maxie Posnack, of the Brownsville Posnacks, when he first emigrated from Commercial High School and entered Jefferson to help that school construct its athletic foundation. A well-built lad, with black, curly locks embellishing his noble brow, Max was quite a neat-looking boy as well as an efficient athlete. Then came the first call for basketball candidates by Coach John F. McNulty, and Max was among those present. Three weeks passed and he had been elected the first captain, quite a distinction in itself.

With the very first game that Jefferson ever participated in, his high-school baseball career was marked with success. First he shut out Brooklyn Friends, and then turned the same trick on Columbia Pre-Law, allowing the future barrists but one bingle. Mind you, all this time he was but a fourth termer. At the conclusion of the season, Posnack's mates honored him with his second captaincy.

Came the second year of Jefferson's existence, and Max was as ready as ever. Only now, he was much more physically fit, having returned from camp a picture of health, a six-footer, weighing in the neighborhood of 175 pounds. It is now history that Posy led the Orange and Blue first to a borough basketball title, then to an interborough crown, but failed in an heroic effort to bring the city gonfalon to the portals of Alma Mater. In baseball his success was of the same proportions, his old reliable southpaw coming very near bringing the borough championship to Jefferson. However, Fernandez bested him in a Tech slaughter, and he had to be satisfied with second position on the first all-scholastic nine.

When we say a born athlete we mean it, for Posnack was an instantaneous success with the eleven. Besides helping the football team along wtih occasional runs and some good defensive play, he gave it that essential factor—fighting spirit. That alone won several games for the Jefferson team. Everything went along fine until the final game of the year, when the one dark spot in his career occurred, and that was breaking a shoulder-blade in the eventful Madison classic. Never can we forget how Mac had to be carried off the field amid the noise and din that cheered his heroic efforts. Therefore, it was only fit that he should make his comeback in a contest versus Madison in a different line of endeavor—his first love, basketball. Jeff was playing Madison behind "closed doors," as the saying goes, because of that football debacle. No spectators were allowed, and the teams were permitted to battle it out for themselves. The players being very excited and anxious, many fouls were committed, with the result that several players were ousted from the contest because of personals. With Madison in the lead by a scant point, and more than three minutes of play remaining, Hart, Rabinowitz and Steinhouse were forced to leave the fray, leaving Coach McNulty in a puzzle as to whom to insert in this all-important skirmish. After several moments of thought, he finally decided upon the crippled Posnack, who was asked to play his first game since the football injury some three months back. But Posy, crippled or in the best of health, made no difference as long as he was in there. Two beautiful passes to Schuckman, and he had made a successful comback, Jefferson winning the game when Schuckman converted these passes into tallies. He tried once more to bring Jefferson up to the city finals, but Newtown was too strong for the graduation-weakened Orange and Blue five, and he had to conclude his high-school court career without ever having played on a city championship team. He captained the baseball team once more in his final year, but graduations of the two terms previous had weakened the nine too much to have it go through another successful campaign comparing to the one of 1926. Nevertheless, he played fine ball throughout the year, losing only because of the failure of his teammates to give him the proper support.

To sum up this boy's marvelous record,

here are some of the bright spots in his career as a Jeffersonian:

1924—Scoring eight points against Franklin K. Lane in the first basketball game that Jefferson ever participated in.

1925—Giving Columbia Pre-Law one hit and shutting them out in a diamond tussle.

1926—Playing Gregory, great Clinton center, to a standstill in the titular court contest between Clinton and Jefferson after the Manhattan colored star had scored seventeen times on Gus Glotzer.

Letting down Madison with one hit and trimming the Kings Highway nine 3 to 0.

Making a sixty-yard run after intercepting a pass in the Flushing football game that Fall. He later converted that run into a touchdown on a line buck.

1927—Coming back to play in the Madison Basketball skirmish after having been seriously wounded in a previous football contest, and after doctors declared that he wouldn't be able to play any more.

Dropping in three successive goals from mid-field to pull the Utrecht basketball game out of fire after the Bensonhurst team had led 18 to 11.

Holding Hamill, all-city forward, to single goal in the championship Newtown fray.

Relieving Fish in the fourth inning and holding Boys' High hitless and runless in the opening league baseball tussle of the season.

Voted the best athlete in the senior class, Hy Goldberg is next in line. No matter what my fellow classmates may think, Hy hasn't quite attained the heights of Posnack. Goldberg's rise to fame is drawn along slightly different lines than Max. Hy was quite a reputable swimmer long before he entered the portals of the newly-built Thomas Jefferson High School, having competed with the Boys' High varsity. Then under the expert tutelage of Coach Saywell Muldorf he developed into one of the best in the city, reaching the climax when he finished second to George Sherwood in the P. S. A. L. championships at Columbia University last January. This is quite an accomplishment, considering the fact that Sherwood is the greatest fifty-yarder ever to grace scholastic waters.

Hy, however, does not confine his great athletic ability to but one line of endeavor. As a baseball pitcher, he is one of the best. It is only unfortunate that such two stars as Alex Fish and Posnack should be on the same team with him. He'd easily be the first string twirler with practically any other outfit. His fate is something of the nature that befell Slim Steinhouse, of basketball fame, who graduated last January. Slim was quite adept at the court game, and could easily have played with any other five, Newtown included; but in Coach McNulty's opinion Hart, Schuckman, Glotzer, Posnack and Robinowitz were all better, and Slim had to suffer by sitting on the bench for almost two seasons.

Then, Goldberg competed on the mile relay quartet that finished second in the novice championships, when Jefferson won the city title, and fourth in the mamoth P. S. A. L. outdoor track and field games.

He also has the distinction of winning first place in the mile run in the Jefferson Field Day games of 1926. His stock is three major awards and two minors. Posnack leads all Jefferson atheletes in this respect, having seven major "J's" to his collection.

Since we ranked Murray Natbony third among the graduating athletes in the Liberty Bell, we may as well give him the same distinction in the senior book. Murray is another one of those very scarce three-letter men—baseball, swimming and track. No matter what Murray may think, it is the writer's humble opinion that his greatest achievement was beating the great Eddie Everard in competition for fourth place in the recent city championships. Everard had already won the low hurdles and the high jump; and everything was pointing for a big day for the Stuyvesant sensation. But Murray had enough "spunk" and ability in him to topple Everard's mark and take fourth in the pole vault. Had it been an ordinary year, Natbony's achievement would not have meant much. But when one takes into consideration that the three that beat out Murray broke a seventeen-year-old record, then Natbony did some tall leaping.

In swimming, Natbony devoted his activities to diving, placing in the finals in the city champs and being a consistent point winner throughout all the dual meets of the season. Two years ago Murray was second string hurler to Posnack on the nine; but for some reason or other he quit the sport flat in the ensuing two years.

We've got some more all-around phenoms and one of them is Phil Gullo, one of the pluckiest Jefferson's ever had the good fortune of possessing. Gullo started out with the baseball team and became quite a threat with the mace. When Phil's right he'll hit them from Nekola down. Next to Milt Drexler, he's about the best lead-off man that ever shared a berth with Coach Delaney's charges. But don't think for a moment that baseball is all that Phil cares for. He ran with Karansky, Petrak and Ranish on the record-breaking 880-yard relay team. This quartet came in second in the city championships, and that because Gullo fell and was spiked about fifty yards from the finish, but picked himself up and continued the race. He has been elected cross-country captain, but he may have to resign should graduation claim him.

Alex Fish is also a two-letter man. Fish's claim to fame lies in the fact that he played at center on the quintet against Newtown in the championship fray, Glotzer having graduated; and then when Spring made its annual debut, beat Erasmus in a game that knocked the Buff and Blue clean out of a chance at the championship frosting. He made them swallow large lumps of the crust from the titular pie, instead of some healthy mouthfuls of delicious whip-cream. May he continue to make his opponents eat crust.

Although not a ten-letter man, Joseph Altman, leader of Jefferson's first soccer championship aggregation, did as much for his Alma Mater as two all-around athletes. Joey played at center forward with the eleven, and how he did it! It took a snowclad turf and all adverse weather conditions to outplay Joe, and that was done by his opponent in the Erasmus game with the city title at stake. But for that game, Altman would probably have been the greatest star ever to show his wares in and around New York City. At it is, he comes very near being the best. Two more team-mates of Joe's graduate with him. They are Sam Fisher and Ben Patursky. Fisher was a track man and baseball performer as well, but his efforts aside from soccer (an exception can possibly be made in track) were nothing to write the folks home about it. Nevertheless, Fisher and Patursky were very valuable cogs in that soccer machine that Mr. Melov built.

McSweeneys may be McSweeneys, and so may Rosenbergs, but a Cohen is one relic that any graduating class in the history of Jefferson will always have. And in the athletic hall of fame we have two of them, Abe and his namesake Lou. Both are nowheres related by family, and they are just as far away in athletic circles. Abe was one of those vulgar affairs that played such common, everyday games as basketball and baseball. To say he tried would be quoting ourselves more correctly. Lou, on the other hand, indulged in such manly pastime as tennis. He was captain in 1926. But his biggest successes came the following year. He only played in five matches in '27 because of some domestic troubles, but came through with colors flying four out of five times.

Lest we forget Coach Carmody and his football eleven, the pigskin warriors lost two of their charter members, namely Ned Berkin and Ben Lapidus. Lapidus was a bulwark of strength at guard, and showed "Tut" Maggio, of Boys' High, a great time in their one and only encounter. Berkin played at end, and did nobly well. Before going into football Ned did some back-stroking for the swimming team, but quit because of internal injuries sustained later on. Morris Primack, a sub, also graduates.

Besides Posnack, Goldberg, Fish and Gullo, "Chubby" Hoffman is the remaining member of the baseball team that Coach Delaney loses via the sheepskin route. Chubby played both as catcher and centerfield. Just a reminder, he did some short-stopping at the first year. Fellow classmates that played with John F. McNulty's pennant-winning quintet include Morris Maidman, Sam Smelnick, Harry Strongin, Joseph Zausner, and Louis Blum, besides the few mentioned before. Maidman, or "Morrie," played at forward when Hart became a lame member right at the start of the last season. He soon became one of the most valuable members of the team while at forward, and it is regretted that he leaves Jefferson just at a time when the Orange and Blue needs him most. Sam Smelnick will never be forgotten for his tireless efforts when asked to replace Rabinowitz in the famous Madison-Jefferson struggle after Charlie had been invited to leave the game because of personal fouls. It was his heroic efforts, and they had to be heroic at such important point of the fray, that saved the day for T. J. High. Harold Strongin, who later became the handsomest senior, scintillated at center. He gave Gute of Newtown quite a lesson on how to handle one's self in a titular contest. He came very near winning the game for Coach McNulty's basketeers. Zausner played both at guard and center, while Blum was the well-known all-around utility man.

The championship rifle team has some claims to athletes in the June, 1927, senior class as well. There is Dave Milstein, expert shot; Mike Feldman, manager of rifle and also of football; Merit Koenig, and Leo Orenstein. Koenig played tennis two summers ago, but found rifle better to his liking. Feldman once played at tackle on the eleven, but two broken collarbones ended his gridiron days.

Still another one of those rare specimens remains—a two-letter men. Captain Joe Nadel of the tennis contingent is the individual, and quite a capable athlete was Joe. Were it not for some trouble with his blood that affected his whole system, he might attain far greater heights than are his and his fame might have been far more spread. Joe had the makings of a real athlete, and it is disgraceful that such trouble should repel him. As matters stand, he played tennis for three years, being captain of the last one, and was a star member of the soccer team in the first two years. He played through one P. S. A. L. schedule, but had to give up all ideas of a second one because of his injuries.

Whatever Coach Peter R. Rodinis did possess in track material—and that wasn't much—he's still going to have less when next September rolls around. Maury Fisher—yes, we have two Fishers as well, George McNeil, Julius Ranish, Sam Petrak and Phil Gullo, who had his name in print several pages before, all appear exceedingly anxious to thank Dr. Lieberman for his kind gift on Commencement night, though their love for track is unquestionable. Of the four runners not mentioned previously, Petrak and Ranish were the best. Both were team-mates of Gullo's on the titular 120-pound relay, besides running for the cross-country team.

Last but not least is the swimming aggregation, tutored by the ever-reliable Signor Muldorfi. The Signor loses four of his most precious mermen in Sammy Bralver, the Yiddish Cannuck; Phil "Happy" Glaberman, Sol Dubeshter and John Penofsky, besides Captain Hy Goldberg and Murray Natbony. The quartet above sure did their share when it came to garnering points for Alma Mater, and deserve more than passing notice. The four above boasted a champion in which sport Jefferson does not foster a team, still he was the title-holder. Yes, Sam Bralver had anybody beat when it came to speaking so many words per minute, and no matter what you say that belongs to athletics.

Now we come to the finale, and before we wind up let us list those physical training instructors and coaches whose names we would like to remember and recall as long as we can think of the frollicking days of yore: Charles Model, chairman of physical training; John Carmody, football; John F. McNulty, basketball; Edward Delaney, baseball; Frank Brookes, intramural; Peter R. Rodinis, track and cross-country; Henry Schacht, track and cross-country; Arthur Eaton, tennis; Isadore Melov, soccer; Maurice Clark, soccer; Jacob Rosenfeld, rifle, and Saywell B. Muldorf, swimming. Amen!

LITERATURE

In the Year 1937--

IN the year 1937, a loyal Jeffersonian got together and wrote on the doings, wise and otherwise, of the graduates of June, 1927. The elapse of ten years finds each in his respective domain, some among the civilized people of England, some among the barbarians of Abyssinia, and some in the Confucian (?) of China. This bible, so called because of its being as invaluable a treasure, and like the bible rarely read except for argumentation and condemnation, soiled and worn has come back to me that I may publish it now.

On the first page is an interesting account of Jack Zack; how he rose from a lawyer of fame to a soap box orator without the aid of Fleischman's Yeast.

Poor Morris Shorenstein! He is still suing his tailor because his trousers were not delivered in time for the Prom. On breeches of promise, I surmise.

Leo Kleban is working for the support of literature—making bookcases is my guess.

May Levine has introduced a new style of woman's headdress with the decorations in the back. At least she's one modern woman who seems to know man's place.

Sidney Schwartz seems to be having a rather tough time at college. He is said to have written to his father, "No mon, no fun, your son." His father cynically replied, "How sad, too bad, your dad."

Sylvia Novak sure is a sympathetic soul. She is said to have consoled her handkerchief in the following way:

"Hush, little handkerchief, don't you cry,
You'll be a party dress, by and by."

Hilda Goldfeder certainly has chosen an excellent vocation—teaching; and this is her reason: The blackboard sets off her blonde hair so beautifully.

Lucy Rosengardt is posing for magazine covers. You know she always used to pose in high school, too.

The age of electricity has so far advanced that it has even attacked human beings. Jacob Wolfowitz is a human dynamo—generating what?

Judith Meyers is on the Board of Regents. Thank goodness I'm not her victim.

June is the month of brides. Seymour Freedgood was aware of that fact and now we find him happily wed to Dotty Nisenson. Lots of luck.

The other eleven months are devoted to divorces. We find Betty Forman making use of them.

Brevity is the soul of wit. No wonder Babitzky did not grow up yet.

We're beginning to believe Ida Levine really is sixteen. She's been consistently swearing to it for the last four years.

Bill Proopis dropped fifteen stories the other day. It didn't hurt him. He's an editor, don't you see?

Sol Albert is an awfully kind soul. He can't bear to see a lady stand in a car while he remains seated. He simply can't. He has to close his eyes.

Nathan Cohen has become a notorious poet. He's writing the dearest nursery rhymes for the Ladies' Home Journal.

Eva Pomerantz is keeping up with the proverb: Legs are made to be seen and not heard.

Lew Herman, now a teacher of economics, accounted for the frightful brevity of girls's skirts in this way:

It's all attributable to the old economic principles of the supply decreasing in proportion to the demand.

Norman London evidently believes that the bigger you are, the harder you fall. He doesn't want to take any chances.

Milton Reiner has become quite a cynical professor. He is continually giving his own theory because he feels sure he can't be proven wrong since his studes are freshmen.

Zausner finds publicity easy to get; all he's got to do is make a success—that's all.

Florence Marks still persists in saying that 2x2—4, in spite of the rise due to post-war arguments. She's not an eco teacher, she's a Math teacher, that's why.

Sophie Auslander is seeking a job as stage director on her record in Jefferson's Class Night. That's reference enough, don't you think?

Max Cohen is a Latin teacher. The first hundred years sure are the hardest.

Claire Shapiro is such a wonderful poet, why, she even finds fault with Shelley.

Felsenstein is a tabloid reporter, you know, and his editor is the famous William Asparagus Proopis. Well, the following conversation was overheard:

Felsenstein—I just heard of a swell headline.

Proopis—Fine! Now go out and pick up a story to fit it.

Leo Orenstein, the Jeffersonian, who finds himself quite at home in Abyssinia, lately won a silver cup for being the best dancer in that country. Well, he ought to, he's been practicing since the Senior Prom.

Gertrude Meshaloff, now known as the American French Girl, swore she'd never go to France. I suppose she's afraid we'll be disillusioned.

Hyman Matlofsky, now a philosopher of Predestination, does not believe in concerning himself with "what man descended from" but "what man will descend to."

Evelyn Charleston has recently changed her name to Cohen. You know that never gets out of style.

Ruth Steigman is wed to a street cleaner. What could one expect? She was on the sanitary squad in Jefferson. Birds of a feather flock together.

Hyman Landweber, as his name signifies, hates water. Yet I hear that he swims through life quite successfully.

Barney Blander is on the police force. I wonder what he'll do when self-government will be taken up by the city.

Ruth Picker is a private secretary and she doesn't chew. I supose that's because she is called a private secretary and not a stenographer.

Mollie Dubin has become quite famous with her artistic laugh. I hope she makes use of it when she reads this—then I'll know I am a success.

SOPHIE SMITH.

In the Palisades

LEAVING the rest of the party behind singing hilariously, Mimi and I wandered off to seek the solitude of the rocks of he Palisades. The sun was playing peek-a-boo behind a low-hanging cloud, and a faint wisp of wind caressing the foam-crested riplets of the Hudson produced melody like that of a skillful pianist running nervous, agile fingers over the keyboard of his instrument.

We walked slowly, silently, letting the inspiring loneliness of the scene sink deep. Suspended over the waters, a frail, tenuous mist shut from view the New York so strange even a few paces outside of bank of the river. Things somehow seem one's native town! Before us like a narrow, meandering rivulet stretched the path that interceded between the Hudson and the looming cliffs. These, like stony, element-beaten walls of some mediaeval casle towered perpendicularly into the very heavens! What cold, haggard splendor these rocks present! Against a cloud of faded blue, the bare branched caricatures of some trees stood outlined, relieving in their dark, fragile laciness the solid mass of mountain beneath.

For a moment the sun emerged to smile down at us with that dazzling, radiant smile of his. Yes, spring was here. She had sprinkled a handful of buds here and there to herald her approach. Within the confines of a nest of rocks, Mimi spied a tiny, golden-hearted daisy that had pushed its way thru the damp to the sunlight. A mountain daisy—that reminds me of—oh, yes—Robert Burns.

A bit later, as the tide ebbed, we could see the rock-strewn base which the waters had submerged. Great boulders separated the path from the river. Against these we stopped to rest and admire the rich, velvety moss that quilted the rocks below. Everything was so different from the hum and bustle of the city. The ocean-washed air, the mournful andante of the waves, the tall, bronzed cliffs surmounted by gaunt, bare trees, the large rocks which supported us and against which we lay gazing at each manoeuvre of the sun, the clouds, the birds—all inspired us with humility and a religious feeling of awe for God, the Creator.

CLAIRE I. SHAPIRO.

DREAMS

What are you
But cobwebs of Fancy
Woven by the Spider Sleep?
He entangles us in his latticed web.
We are mere playthings,
Wax in his hands.
He gambles with our emotions,
Making us either hope for daylight,
Or wish that we may never be roused
From our lethargy.
Once caught in its gossamer web,
We are slavishly bound to it;
Until the first faint gleam of dawn
Proclaims us free.
Then the spell is broken,
The web shattered . . .
We emerge,
The shackles removed.

INDIFFERENCE

Indifference,
Creeping over me
Like a veiled shadow.
Indifference,
Making my soul contract
Into a narrow shell.
Indifference,
Making the deadly poison
Seep slowly through my veins.
Indifference,
Making me forgetful
Of beauty, of love,
Of evil, of good,
Of all, even life itself.
Indifference,
Why are you doing your deadly work
Slowly but surely?
Bitter disillusionment,
Morose and morbid thoughts
Have made me
An unfeeling piece of common clay.

IDA L. LEVINE.

PARTING

I sometimes think if we had parted, dear,
In hate and quarreling, instead of pain,
Your going might have been less hard to bear,
And I would not sit up all night, in vain.

Tears, trying to forget I ever knew
The gentle kiss you gave me that last dawn;
The way the robins chirped in the cool dew,
And stilled their sweet songs after you had gone.

You woke in me a throbbing love I do not understand,
Strange, how my life should change so by the waving of a hand.

HYMAN MATLOFSKY.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: To be read after a good meal when not critical, intelligent or imaginative)

AS I entered his sanctum, I saw a blazing orange and blue poster shouting to the world the fact that Professor Buggs was "by far the world's best memory wizard" — "has never forgotten a fact"—"knows everything."

He was snoring resolutely in a large dust-filled bathtub with no water in it. I tickled the toe of his left foot with a rabbit's paw. Thereupon he stood up and sang the suspender song, "It all depends on you." During the process of the song, the yellow canary and the dirty white poodle died.

Professor Buggs then jumped out of the bath tub, took the pipe out of his mouth, put on his straw hat, and screamed (in a low voice) "Huh, you're Bill Proopis. You once borrowed a one dollar bill from me—to be exact, you touched me three hundred and twenty-five days, four hours, six minutes and two seconds ago. The number of the bill was series 2A 1914 1Z 209407 3B, you wore a brown suit, size 16, were 3 feet 3 inches in height, wore a straw hat, and chewed XXX gum. (He talked so much he forgot to ask me for the money).

In reply to a question he said, "The Chinese situation is terrific. 967,080 Nationalist Chinamen are wearing yellow shirts and green parasols. 210,000,001 laundrymen from Shanghai are wearing green shirts and yellow parasols. When they clash, the situation will be a very blue one.

I queried, "Professor, can you give me a glimpse into the future?"

"Certainly," he replied.

"Well, I countered, "There is a motion before Congress as to the passing of a law forcing all women to wear cotton stockings instead of silk stockings. How will the vote be?"

Very promptly he replied, "The 'Ayes' will have it."

In reply to interrogation about crowded subways, he expounded, "The complaint of strap hangers is a long-standing one. I estimated that if we eliminate the fat workmen by reducing their time for lunch, we may in time be able to stuff 2,000 rush hour travellers into a train built for merely 90 underground tourists."

While this enlightening interview was going on, Professor Buggs received a telephone call from his wife by a private home telephone connection. The mouthpiece of the phone was atrophied from long disuse. He kept repeating "Yes, yes, and yes, dear." Suddenly the earphone shrivelled up. In response to my unvoiced query, he said, "Of all things, I forgot it was our wedding anniversary. My wife just called up to remind me gently that the jewelry stores were all closed. I'll have to write out a nice check to smooth it out with my wife." When he came to the space reserved for signature, he paused and asked, "What did you say my name was?" I answered "Professor Edmund C. Buggs." He chortled like a child and made the startling discovery that his wife's name must of necessity be Mrs. Buggs.

After he had written the check, a look of disgust came over his face. Then he tore up the check. He had forgotten to keep a balance for his check account.

—WILLIAM PROOPIS.

An Essay

TO me, when in a pensive mood, the most tragic, the most pathetic thing in the world is a great poem or song. Then, observing things from a broader viewpoint, a viewpoint that extends far into the future of Time, I feel encompassed by a deep, foreboding Poe-like sense of tragedy. I feel to the marrow of my soul, perhaps too strongly than is good for my mental health, the icy, stupendous tragedy of life in its completeness, of life on one globe from the standpoint of eternal Time and infinite Space. And especially do I sense this when I think of a great poem or song.

I see the composer, a genius, a great man with an immense brain and an infinite mind, a man of deep feeling, one who attempted to probe the great mysteries he finds himself surrounded by—but fails through human weakness. He feels the grandeur of Nature. He feels that there are many things spiritual, beautiful, awe-inspiring in Nature. He feels that there is something—something just beyond his grasp—farther than he can see, bigger than he can understand. But he feels this deeply—so that sometimes his emotions are intense enough to lift him to a point where he can just lift a corner of the veil to hear faintly the music of the spheres. This is a moment of inspiration. In this he leaves us an immortal tune, a far-sweeping melody, an elating emotion. In this the poet scrawls the lines of a sublime truth or an image of beauty, lines pregnant with meaning and mystery, lines that arouse in us almost the same great sensations that swayed him.

But human that he is, it is not for him to comprehend—and confounded by what he sees he drops the veil and falls back to earth. He has glimpsed of things beyond most humans and therefore he is often misunderstood by his fellow men. In Emerson's words "To be great is to be misunderstood."

And so he lives his life—the brightest blossom of the human race, perhaps trampled upon by the mob as Burns or permitted to bloom to his greatest height as Tennyson. He lives and looks about him, and wonders, and sympathizes, and runs the gamut of the emotions and plays upon the heart strings of his fellow men. And he dies—perhaps content upon having seen or perhaps distracted upon not having seen enough.

But his themes do not die. They live on, sometimes neglected, but often finding a sympathetic reaction in kindred hearts. And very often also do the majority recognize its value and give it their attention. They do not garner from his labours as much as he puts in them, they do not feel as deeply as he did, but they are to some extent "spiritually excited." After listening to an immortal tune or reading some magic verse they do feel that new sensation that lifts them beyond their immediate generation.

And thus the poem or song lives throughout the ages and helps to make men's lives fuller, happier more complete, more rounded out, helps make them appreciate that life after all is a great adventure, that there is more life than mere bread and money, helps to make them thankful that they live to feel the vast forces about them.

But—the eternal but—life on the planet does not endure forever. Comparatively soon, intellectual life will die, all life will die, the earth will be no more. The paper which contains the lines that were called immortal will be toyed with by the hoof of a contented beast. The paper upon whose face was pressed the lines that were called immortal will be blown about by the chance winds on a hollow, bleak, cold, stony globe, teeming with memories. The sun will rise and the sun will set and through its course will illuminate the paper whose lines were called immortal. The elements will steal the color from the lines, will yellow the paper. Each gust of wind will take a scrap with it. Soon the sun in its course will find no paper. And soon Time and Space will see neither sun nor planet.

Where—where are the tunes now? Where are the words now? Where are the rhymes now? Where are the reverberating echoes, the applause of the multitude? Where are the bones of the composer? Here we have a living, fervent being, in the throes of inspiration, who pens in undying ink for the uplifting of humanity and for his own everlasting fame something that he was permitted to see of the abstract. On the other hand we have a void, a world obliterated, sans life, sans position. No—not even a forlorn memory. Here is stupendous tragedy.

Will these tunes be ever duplicated? Will these rhymes be ever repeated? Will these mysteries be ever solved? These mysteries will always exist, a part of Nature, just as long at Nature exists. Will other poets ever sigh, wonder, sense awe, look at the stars inquiringly? Will life repeat itself in the same way or will these tunes float away into Space and Time, swallowed up by the void? "From the deep sea to the deep sea they go." Life will probably exist elsewhere. But will poets, if there be intelligent life, ever write the same music?

MILTON REINER

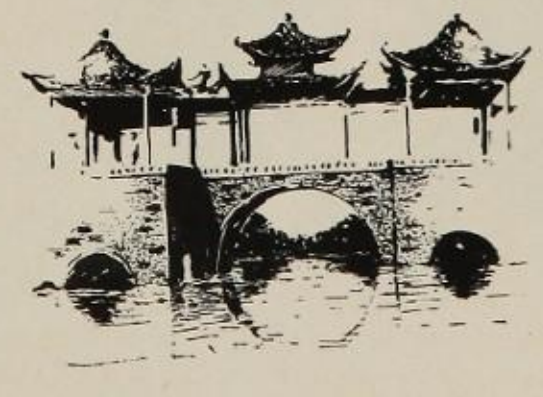
THE CLIMBER

In some unknown town in distant Switzerland,
Where mountains try to reach the sky,
I met a mountain-climber,
Who climbed those stately hills.

I've climbed these mountains
Which reach to the sky;
I've seen the men, go step by step,
Unfaltering on their way, they reach the top
But then, I've watched—these youthful fools
Go rashly up the jagged rocks
Until they come to that great colossal rock,
And then—they're carried off the field
Baffled, in their try.

And so, I've climbed these mountains, step by step
Until I reached the peak.

HENRY KIRSCH.



Old Soldier

THERE is a slight resemblance
Between that and myself.
Slight? Well, thirty years
Have left their impression on me since.

How grand and stalwart I seem
In that uniform of Czar Nicolai's!
I was once like that—see?
But all's so changed
Since thirty years have come between.
I was four-and-twenty, friend,
When that artist painted me
Young and carefree as a lark.
For twenty years it has lain
Concealed in a musty trunk
That which was me once—
Just look at that figure, friend,
Was I not a handsome devil?
What fond reminiscences it awakens—
An army man I, under Czar Nicolai—
He's dead now who was once so omnipotent
And that brother officer of mine—
I just can't recall his name—
Who was sent to serve in Siberia,
Nicolai's hell-hole—he must be dead, now,
Poor man—
Fate was not over-kind to him.
And Dobrisch, that fool,
Caught sleeping on post with sword unsheathed
My word saved him from a long prison term.
Nicolai was ever harsh
With those who disobeyed his commands.
Thirty long years have elapsed, friend.
I am no longer four-and-twenty,
Six foot tall I seem there—
I must have shrank since—

Oh, well, thirty years is a life-time, friend,
I'm older and wiser now,
Why, my eldest boy is that age, God bless him!
He's not so strapping husky
As I was at his age;
His lot is more honey and roses
Than was mine in darkest Russia.
An old soldier I, tho' you wouldn't think so.
When I die, friend,
I shall be buried in my soldier's uniform,
With this as my epitaph:

"A soldier he lived,
A soldier he died;
He'll come before God
With his sword word at his side!"

CLAIRE I. SHAPIRO.

Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto to have quite set free
The half-regained Eurydice.

THE Orpheus of the winged insects one day sailed forth into space in search of a morsel or two. Of course he could have had a nice green lizard or a fat-bellied roach, but, I would have you know that this Orpheus was a connoisseur as well as a musician of note.

This particular day, his delicate gastronomic organs demanded nothing more or less than a fuzzy, plump flea with a green back if possible.

As luck would have it, he could not even see, much less taste such a flea. At last he came to rest on the edge of a greasy plate and for lack of anything better, licked the plate with dreamy eyes contemplating the ceiling. His stomach gave a joyful jump. Lo! there, entangled in an ever growing spider web was a fat, juicy flea and joy! he had a green iridescent back. The poor little flea was struggling to get away but to no avail. The spider was strengthening his web, preparing his meal mentally.

The hypocritical Orpheus decided that he would "rescue" the poor flea. Without a glance at the greasy dish, he soared aloft and landed near the web. Thereupon he began his wondrous song, calculated to stop anything from work. The imperturbable mosquito at last took cognizance of the music and wrapt in the spell of the magic tune, ceased his labors. The winged Orpheus's eyes took on a shining look of anticipation, and he further exerted himself. Little by little the flea worked himself loose and finally hung by one leg. Orpheus's gastric juices rose up in his throat at the scene and choked him. The music stopped. The spell was broken and the ever-busy spider resumed his task and ate the flea.

TO THE WIND

I.

Blow wind, blow and growl and roar,
  Sweep the tiny grain of sand,
  Up into your palmless hand,
  Make them look like a restless band
Fighting on a windy shore.

II.

Blow wind, sound your hollow knell,
    Blow and blow and blow and blow,
  Take me with you as you go!
  Sing to me your song of woe,
The song I hear my own heart tell.

III.

He laughed at me with ire and scorn;
  He said: "Your will is not your own,
  But like a leaf it has been blown
  Away from you to parts unknown."
He left me weeping and forelorn.

IV.

Blow wind, sing your lifeless song!
  Blow me like a spineless leaf,
  An empty wrinkled spineless leaf
  That never felt the pangs of grief.
Blow me far from human wrong!

RAE ALPERT.

SPANISH SONGS

In Spanish songs I find that wild abandon
Which makes me wonder at the masked tragedy beneath,
That is so nearly completely hidden.

They are playing the game,
Playing it with fire and spirit,
Painting life with harmonious touches
Of wine-red and black.

L. K.

AUTUMN

The autumn wind approaches
  On wings of golden-brown;
The leaves go whirling madly,
  And heap up round and round.

Each falling leaf a symbol,
  Each blowing breeze a sigh;
The trees in sad attire,
  Raise naked hands up high.

SPANISH LOVE

Two clicking heels,
  Two castanets.
Two flirting eyes,
  A silhouette . . .
A magic tune,
The soul entranced,
  A beauty of Southern Spain has danced.

GOLDBERGH SWIMS ATLANTIC ON SANDWICH AND HALF

Hy Goldbergh, formerly of T. J. H. S., successfully completed his New York-Paris swim to-day. Leaving Canarsie beach at 4:15 A.M., Goldbergh encountered a heavy coating of ice off Newfoundland. Undaunted, Hy broke the ice by diving and coming up head foremost. At Sandusky, Ireland, Goldbergh discovered that his earth-inductor compass had gone wrong. He continued, however, since he swam on water and therefore needed no earth compass.

As he approached Le Bourget Swimming Hole and was but ten feet from the dock, Goldbergh became fatigued and thinking that he could not make it wanted to turn around and swim back to New York. Just then the tide went out and "Lucky" Goldbergh found himself on Rue de la Aeroplane where Lindbergh landed some 23 years ago.

Goldbergh ate but a sandwich and a half during the entire trip. Thoughts of his lunch, which was prepared by the Cooking Squadron of the Student Patrol, probably kept him from eating more.

BROWNSVILLE SELECTS BEAUTY REPRESENTATIVE

After considerable controversy, Miss D. Patricia Thompson, recent arrival from Dublin and Trenton, was selected to represent Brownsville in the annual beauty pageant at Atlantic City. The judges were impressed by Miss Thompson's IRISH smile, her JEWISH lisp, and also her fiance was seen waving AMERICAN dollar bills at the judges.

FIAT RINSO COPS DERBY

In a thrilling finish Fiat Rinso, son of Fiat Lux, captured the Canarsie Derby on April Fool's Day.

Success was due in large measure to the excellent jockeying of jockey Barney Jacques Bird. An accident nearly occurred when coming around for the last lap, Fiat Rinso caught up to herself and stepped on her hind hoofs.

Profitting by the experience gained while handling "Roman ponies," in the Jefferson High School, Jockey Bird explained the trouble to the judges, using different words than those in the rule-book, and thus escaped disqualification.

Incidentally, the Derby won by Fiat Rinso, is one of straw, sold by Zausner the Hatter.—adv.

T. J. RECORDS BROKEN

Records of ancient standing were broken in the January—June 1950 term it was revealed to-day by the Mathematics Squadron of the Student Patrol.

On April 2, 1950, 247 sick passes were issued. Moreover, 500 applications for sick passes were rejected.

After examining the lunch-room food and report cards of the sick students, school authorities were still at loss as to what caused the apparently contagious desease. The trouble was finally unearthed when it was found that Abe Allen of the Class of '27, was billed at Loew's Metropolitan.

On December 25, 1949, a new record was established when not a single Jeffersonian came to school late. It happened to be Christmas when school is not in session.

ALLEN'S ANTIQUES
(Jokes)

By Abe Allen

Speaking of trans-Atlantic flights the other day I said to my friend, Rastus:

"Say, Rastus, how'd you like to make a flight across the ocean?"

"No, suh; ah won't like it at all. I like terra firma. The more firmer the less terror."

But getting down to the point, as the fountain pen ink said, this fellow Lindbergh certainly handed you, me and everybody else a big surprise by crossing the Atlantic in 33 hours.

Think of what this will mean to our stage and screen stars who heretofore have had to waste an entire week in sailing to Paris, to obtain a divorce.

Now, within a week they can get married, be divorced in Paris, return to America and still have time to remarry before the week is over.

But frequent flights across the Atlantic seems so far in the distance, that, like Walker's subway plan, we hardly think it will ever be put into practice.

Yet, as the lady said about her age, one never can tell about such things.

Now that "Lucky" crossed the Atlantic, he is besieged by hundreds asking him to become an actor, writer, movie star, bootlegger, husband, social lion, politician or what have you.

But, unlike our brainy heavyweight champion, he gave them all the air and refused to venture any opinion on the works of George Bernard Shaw.

But that isn't all.

"Lucky" turned down kings, queens and lots of Jack just to remain an ace.

The World We Live In

IT was a warm day in school and at lunch time the proud senior surveyed the usual crowd in the hall with lustreless eyes. He secured a comfortable position leaning against the wall just outside the library and watched the horse-play and other childish antics of the lower classmen. Soon he noticed a strange being, standing beside him, a sort of "attendant Spirit." He marveled because it seemed that he had been there always, though never before had the senior seen him. He turned to resume his watch of the hall and noticed that somehow the murmur of the people had changed to a low humming and buzzing and they themselves had changed in appearance.

"A queer looking bunch but a fine collection," murmured the "Attendant Spirit." "Yes, indeed, a fine collection".

The Senior looked again and rubbed his eyes. There where his friends and acquaintances had been before, were beetles, bugs, and other insects. After watching them for a few moments, he was surprised to notice that his only emotion was curi osity and not so much surprise.

"Who and what are they?" he heard himself asking, "what makes them so different and why are they here?"

Just a minute! Just a minute! Ah! See that fine bunch of Gemus Athleticus. Then the Strange One pointed to a queer collection of insects gathered together. They all had small heads, long antennae and strange markings. They were pushing and climbing over each other and each was chattering of the virtue and nobility of his own family. No one listened, but they pushed and squirmed and chattered on.

The Senior turned for information.

"Who are they all?"

The Strange One readily pointed them out and told of each one.

"That is a Soccerbug. See his large feet and small head. You can always tell him from the others because of his striped markings, running up and down his back. He is agreeable and perfectly harmless. Those other two bugs are Basketball-bugs. They are similar to Soccer-bugs, excepting it is their front feet which are developed and their stripes are fewer. That remarkable thing is a Cross-country cricket. It is used to hopping fences and brooks, and taking long journeys. It is very conceited over its ability in this direction, though only a few suspect it. As you see it is quiet and rather sombrely marked. The Trackhoppers wrigling about are closely related but not so sturdily built and the Cricket refuses to consider it quite as an equal. There is a Tennisfly and a Waterbug. The Tennisfly is somewhat of a cross between a hopper and a baseball beetle. The Waterbug is an amphibian. He is always very quiet for he has so little to be nervous about. But after all, so few of the bugs have. The strange cooties that hang around have neither the body of a Genus Athleticus nor the head of a Genus Intellectus. They have a peculiar cry which they constantly emit. All day they will squeak, "Football, football, we wanna team." They are not important bugs no matter how you take them. The pretty collection are the Baseball bugs. They are very well developed and also very amiable."

"Whew!" exhaled the Senior, "they are a strange collection. But what is this noisy mob or I should say 'herd' or 'hive'?"

"These are the Genus Intellectus," continued the Spirit. "They are a very strange group of oddities, characterized by broad bulging foreheads and then, spindly legs. Their heads seem larger than the rest of their bodies, but this is an optical illusion. They make an incredbile amount of noise and would almost deceive one into thinking that they are worth while. The loudest group over there are the Literary Lice. They can expound or explode any theory of philosophy, psychology and other ologies worth equal felicity, and their critical ability of other people's work is wonderfully developed. The sour expression on their faces is the result of mental indigestion. They have probably just condemned the existing order of things and are on the verge of startling insectdom with their own propositions. It is to be hoped that they may, by the grace of the Kind Lord, recover sometime. Those Dramabeeles have exactly the same characteristic developed in a slightly different way. In sharp contrast with them are the Chessbugs. They are very meek and will find peace and content for several hours in putting a King's Knight's opening against a Queen's Gambit Declined.

"Those drones with the well developed chests and heads are members of the Debating Clique. They are called Drones because they will drone on for hours on a subject of not the slightest interest to anyone. Most of the Genus Intellectus are not here. The biggest class consists of Bookworms. They have a very quiet air as of having just been kicked about and are also very unobtrusive. None of the lice or other beetles will really recognize it until it has done something to lift it from the common herd."

"I should say they are worse off than the others?" interrupted the Senior, quite overcome by the spectacle. "Can nothing be done for them?"

"Nothing! They must outgrow their deformities just as the Genus Athleticus and Clubibus and Ordinarius."

"What species is that? The ones with the superior, serious, dignified air who lord it all over the others?"

"They are the Genus Pedagogicus. They are properly divided into two classes by their peculiar habits. There are the Deadly Dull and Those That Think They Are Funny. Some people declare one kind worse and others the other kind. It is a recognized fact that the female of this species is more numerous and deadly.

Suddenly, there was a loud clamor and the bugs scurried away in all directions. The Senior seemed to see a huge, snapping black beetle come up to him and felt it grab him by the shoulder.

"Come, come," he heard it say, "no loitering in the halls. You must go, though you are a senior, to your next classroom."

The Senior tore away and down the hall, calling back, "Yes, sir, right away," and to himself, "BElieve me, if I can't go out nights without falling asleep while standing the next day, I'd better go to bed at nine o'clock hereafter."

THE Study of Pitman

THE study of Pitman Shorthand provides material assistance in the mastery of English. Isaac Pitman, eminent student of the fundamentals of English speech, invented shorthand principles that were simple, scientific and precise, and based them upon the structure of the English language.

AS a result of this, Pitman Shorthand, unlike other systems, is a direct aid in the elimination of incorrect syllabication, poor pronunciation, and general misuse of English.

THE practicability of Pitman Shorthand for the verbatim reproduction of spoken English has resulted in its being almost the sole means of recording the proceedings of Congresses, Parliaments, Courts, wherever accurate recording of speech is necessary—throughout the English-speaking world.
